Doyle Murphy spent years escaping the consequences of rampaging through his Navy enlistment like a drunken chimpanzee wielding a flamethrower. It now appears that his luck may be running out.

The captain that protected him has been relieved of command. The Belleau Wood's new skipper has a fetish for ruining men for frivolous offenses. Murphy's increasingly unstable division officer is emboldened by the change. He sees it as an opportunity to finally make Murphy pay for past transgressions.

With a bullseye on his back, Murphy longs for the solace he found amid the bedlam of the Philippines. He wants to get back to the only woman in the world who can keep his demons at bay. Without him there, Murphy fears that she may get forced back into the Barretto skin trade. Worse, her young daughter may one day end up following in her footsteps.
