Over twelve years after her debut chapbook of poetry, t(he)re (St. Andrews University Press), Margaret Mason Tate returns to publication with inJust Time. As much an investigation of time as t(he)re was of space, Tate weaves through the calendar making observations about navigating love and loss during a global pandemic. Tate works through the death of her mother via wrenching pieces such as “The Special K Box,” which examines the belongings of the dead in a way that feels relatably myopic. The use of space and emphasis on the page remains a priority to Tate, and readers are encouraged to look for “Easter eggs” in the typesetting of each poem.
